Summary of programme aims

The course will enable teachers and other educationalists to deepen their understanding of teaching and learning in general and of Inclusive Education in the broadest sense including the role of special education with particular reference to primary and secondary schools. The course is designed to build on the existing experience practitioners bring with them, helping them to develop a critical awareness of both theoretical and practical issues in this important field. Graduates of the course will offer their institutions a reflective and critical awareness of the significant ways in which teachers can enable students to learn. This expertise will enhance graduates' ability to become more effective as professionals.

Transferable skills

Students will develop the following transferable skills:-

Ability to use library and other academic resources
Writing skills: writing papers/ essays/professional reports, summarising of others work from written, oral and visual representations, reviewing the work of peers
Ability to make oral presentations
Ability to become self-aware through critiquing existing policies and practice in Inclusive Education
Ability to undertake independent and collaborative research

Programme content

All students will initially register for the generic Masters in Teaching and Learning. In order to undertake the Inclusive Education route students must take two out of the following three core modules indicated by [I] below. Typically for Route A enabling students to obtain an MA in Teaching and Learning [Inclusive Education] students can take either two (minimum requirement) or three from the three core modules indicated by[I]. Plus at least one Research module indicated by[R] below and choose further modules to make up a total of six modules. If more than one research module is undertaken, then the project undertaken for each research module must be substantially different to any previous research module. For route B students need to take at least two [I] modules plus one [R] module and one further module.

All students are initially placed on Route A ie six taught modules (120 credits) and the 15-20,000 word dissertation (60 credits). Students may transfer to Route B ie four taught modules (80 credits) and the longer (25-30,000 word), more research based dissertation (100 credits) , if they have the approval of the course leader. Students on Route B are therefore unable to qualify for the Postgraduate Diploma (120 taught credits).

In addition, Participants may choose up to four modules on Route A and two on Route B from the full range of modular provision within the Institute of Education.

Inclusive Education) Students on Route B are therefore unable to qualify for the Postgraduate Diploma. [120 taught credits].

Summary of teaching and assessment

Teaching is by a variety of methods, including lectures, seminars, workshops, individual feedback on written work and individual supervisions. The programme provides opportunities for a high proportion of school /institution based research and students are encouraged to review how they will take advantage of these opportunities over the course of the programme. Normally international students are encouraged to use the university as the base for their research activities.

Support for students and their learning

University support for students and their learning falls into two categories. Learning support includes IT Services, which has several hundred computers and the University /library, which across its three sites holds over a million volumes , subscribes to around 4000 current periodicals, has a range of electronic sources of information and houses the Student Access to Independent Learning (S@IL) computer-based teaching and learning facilities. There are language labs both for those students studying on a language degree and for those taking modules offered by the Institution-wide Language Programme. Student guidance and welfare support is provided by Programme Directors , the Career Advisory Service, the University's Special Needs Advisor, Study Advisors, Hall Wardens and the Students' Union.

The Bulmershe Campus contains its own Library with an excellent stock of education books and journals and its own IT facilities. A comprehensive handbook is available for the course. Through its partnerships the Institute has active relationships with a network of over 300 schools and 10 Local Education Authorities.

Career prospects

The course will greatly enhance the knowledge base and career progression of participants involved at any stage of Inclusive education within their educational organisation (school/college). It is specifically designed to support those who are keen to become informed leaders in the field of inclusion. It provides an excellent introduction to the critique of education necessary for work at Local education Authority level.

Educational aims of the programme

Students are required to demonstrate more advanced understandings than at first degree level with specific emphasis on the educational issues related to Inclusive Education and teaching and learning. In order that teachers become researchers , they must undertake at least one small scale research project before the dissertation. The course is designed to be as flexible as possible in order to attract working professionals and to place strong emphasis on the national policy to enable teachers to be researchers in the field. This latter emphasis is reflected in the opportunities for participants to undertake research in their current institutions. Participants will have excellent opportunities to develop specific areas of expertise by drawing on the extensive range of Institute Modular Masters provision. This specialism can also be reflected in the potential to achieve an award entitled masters in Teaching and Learning [Inclusive Education]; this award can be achieved by taking at least two modules from the course and by completing a dissertation in the area of Inclusive Education.
