Summary of programme aims

This multi-disciplinary programme aims to provide a thorough degree level education in Classical Studies and English. The syllabus aims to familiarise students with the literature, art, philosophy and history of Greek and Roman cultures and their reception and use in modern culture, whilst extending students' knowledge of a variety of kinds of English texts, and perspectives on different methods of critical analysis. The programme also provides for the development of the specific interests of students through independent study and specifically the dissertation. Students will expand the range, depth and sophistication of their knowledge of Classical Studies and English through the structured progression of Parts 1,2, and 3 of the programme.

Transferable skills

The University's Strategy for Teaching and Learning has identified a number of generic transferable skills which all students are expected to have developed by the end of their degree programme. In following this programme, students will have had the opportunity to enhance their skills relating to career management, communication (both written and oral), information handling, problem-solving, team working and use of information technology.

On completion of the programme, students are also expected to have acquired a range of intellectual skills including the ability to formulate and evaluate their own arguments and those of others, to translate subject-specific knowledge and skills to new environments, to find and use relevant information resources, to manage their time effectively, and to work independently as well as co-operatively.

Programme content

Each Part of the degree programme comprises 120 credits. In Part 1, students must take a minimum of 40 credits in Classical Studies and 60 credits in English; the remaining 20 credits may come either from a Classical Studies option or from a module or modules available elsewhere in the University. Part 1 in Classical Studies introduces students to the study of Greek and Roman cultures, with a particular emphasis upon the development of the study of primary sources and source criticism. In English, students engage with fundamental debates about the study of literature through close analysis of selected texts from different periods. In Parts 2 and 3 students must normally take 80 credits in Classical Studies and 40 credits in the School of English each year. In consultation with their programme adviser, they may choose to take up to 20 credits each year from modules available elsewhere in the University. The English strand of the programme offers increased breadth of coverage, focusing on a variety of individual periods, topics and/or generic traditions, while Classical Studies develops students' knowledge of ancient literature and an awareness of the role of the classics in the shaping of modern Western culture.

Not all optional modules will be available in any one year. Admission to optional modules is at the discretion of the Programme Director.

Support for students and their learning

University support for students and their learning falls into two categories. Learning support includes IT Services, which has several hundred computers, and the University Library, which across its three sites holds over a million volumes, subscribes to around 4,000 current periodicals, has a range of electronic sources of information and houses the Student Access to Independent Learning (S@IL) computer-based teaching and learning facilities. There are language laboratory facilities both for those students studying on a language degree and for those taking modules offered by the Institution-wide Language Programme. Student guidance and welfare support is provided by Personal Tutors, the Careers Advisory Service, the University's Special Needs Advisor, Study Advisors, Hall Wardens and the Students' Union.

Students receive Handbooks from both Classical Studies and English which give details of the programme, guidance on study skills such as note-taking and essay writing, and information about staff, facilities, and sources of specialized help within the University, such as the Study Skills Advisor and the Counselling Service. Both components of the programme are designed to support students throughout their degree course while encouraging more independent work in Part 3. Academic feedback and guidance is given through one-to-one essay tutorials, and academic and personal support is provided through the tutor system and the University's Personal and Academic Record (PAR) scheme. Dissertation workshops prepare students for the Part 3 dissertation which is individually supervised. The Department of Classics is the Curator of the Ure Museum of Greek Archaeology. The Geoffrey Matthews Collection, housed in the School of English, has a collection of books, xeroxed materials, cassettes and videos for loan to students, and a video-viewing suite is available within the Faculty. The Library's electronic databases include the OED, the MLA Bibliography, and the DNB on CD ROM, and such on-line resources as JSTOR and First Search. Specialist subject librarians are available to give students advice and guidance to library resources.

Career prospects

Graduates from this joint degree programme have found that their course has been a good basis for careers in management, administration, the civil service, commerce, law, publishing, librarianship and teaching. A number of graduates have also gone on to further academic study and research. More generally, the degree provides students with a wide range of communication and analytical skills that will serve them in good stead in the marketplace.

Opportunities for study abroad

Through the department of Classics, two students in year 2 can study for the Fall Semester at the University of Calgary's Department of Greek and Roman Studies. Applications to take part in the exchange need to be made in the Spring term of Year 1. The Department also has an ERASMUS link with the University of Crete. Students are also encouraged to apply to the British School in Athens, where they may take a module for credit, and the British School in Rome.

Educational aims of the programme

The programme aims to develop students' knowledge and understanding of a wide range of works of Classical literature, art and philosophy and English texts. It also aims to promote an informed and self-reflective awareness of procedures of critical and cultural analysis, and, by exposing students to a variety of learning experiences, to equip them with broad transferable skills of potential value to future employers.
