Programme information and content

The Consumer Behaviour and Marketing programme explores the theory and practice of consumer science and core principles of marketing. We aim to introduce you to a range of degree-level multidisciplinary subjects in consumer behaviour and marketing to develop an understanding of the psychology of a consumer. You will explore how the consumer influences, and is influenced by, the socio-economic environment, how consumer choices are made, how they can be modified and how the marketing of goods and services is interactively shaped by consumer needs, values and culture.

On this programme, you have the opportunity to apply your knowledge to chosen fields of interest. Among others, you will develop core skills in the areas of consumer behaviour, marketing, applied psychology, economics and market research methods. A wide variety of options from across the University will enable you to focus on those most relevant to your interests and objectives

Training in the application of these disciplines is key to the development of knowledge and transferable skills. You will develop an understanding of the challenges and opportunities that exist in the wider consumer sector, for example the design and development of effective marketing and consumer policy strategies. You will also learn to critically analyse the socio-cultural, economic, technological, environmental and ethical contexts shaping consumer choice. Students registered on the 4-year programme are expected to undertake a period of professional training between Parts 2 and 3, either in the UK or internationally.

During the course of your studies at Reading, you will be expected to develop your academic and personal transferable skills, including analysis and critical thinking, problem solving, numeracy, research design, information handling, report writing, written and oral communication, team working, use of information technology and career management. You will be encouraged to enhance these skills through a variety of opportunities available outside your curriculum.

Part 1:	Part 1 provides a grounding in marketing, psychology and economics through a range of mediums, including practice-based projects, lectures and practical sessions. Students will be given training in economics and the mathematical and statistical ideas used by applied economists and business managers, in addition to developing skills in the acquisition, interpretation and presentation of quantitative and qualitative data for consumer research.
Part 2:	Part 2 enables you to build on learning from Part 1 with a particular emphasis on consumer behaviour, psychology, economics and marketing management. You will also apply your research skills and knowledge in a consumer research project in partnership with a local business. Available options provide an opportunity to develop a critical understanding in an area of interest such as, digital marketing, entrepreneurship and issues in food choice and retailing.
Part 3:	Part 3 gives you the opportunity to focus more deeply on the consumer behaviour context, with in-depth exploration of marketing strategy, advertising and branding, consumer policy and research. Students may also continue to apply their knowledge-base in a number of fields including business, psychology entrepreneurship and food. The emphasis in Part 3 is on the continued development of research skills, and on independent research and enquiry culminating in a dissertation in an area of interest.
