Programme information and content

This degree provides an in-depth investigation into modern English studies. Working with such unique and important resources as the Beckett Archive, the programme will introduce students to methods of research with regard to bibliography, manuscripts, databases, and editing. In the initial stages, the MA will also require students to question and think critically about the organisation of English studies, and especially about the social and chronological categories that are often invoked to place and to explain literature. Following on from this questioning of traditional paradigms in the compulsory modules, the range of the optional modules again invites students to consider the comparative and transnational dynamics of modern English studies. The programme grants students a wide choice of specialised modules within sub-areas of strong current research interest, from the early modern to the contemporary; it enables detailed study of particular authors and canons, from Shakespeare to Beckett, from nation to diaspora.

Module information

The programme comprises of 180 credits, allocated across a range of compulsory and optional modules. Compulsory modules are listed.

Compulsory Modules:

Module	Name	Credits	Level
ENMMT	Materiality and Textuality	30	7
ENMMED	Dissertation	90	7

The remaining credits will be taken from the list of optional modules from the School of Literature and Languages or from an approved list of modules from across the University.

Part-time or flexible modular arrangements

Part-time and modular students are required to take the module on ENMESG in their first term. Students must complete four modules before beginning their dissertation.

Additional costs of the programme

Costs are indicative and may vary according to optional modules chosen and are subject to inflation and other price fluctuations.

The estimates were calculated in 2018.

Optional modules:

The optional modules available can vary from year to year. An indicative list of the range of optional modules for your Programme is set out in the Further Programme Information. Details of any additional costs associated with the optional modules, will be made available to you prior to the beginning of the programme. Entry to optional modules will be at the discretion of the University and subject to availability. Although the University tries to ensure you are able to take the optional modules in which you have expressed interest this cannot be guaranteed.

Teaching and learning delivery:

Students are taught in plenary seminar sessions, and also in smaller guided study groups, by the tutors of English and research methods in The Department of English Literature. Active participation by students is expected and encouraged at every stage. Classes in research methods and resources are incorporated into the Materiality and Textuality module. The dissertation is supported by a series of seminars on aspects of dissertation writing, followed by one-to-one supervision.

Total study hours for your programme will be 1800 hours. The contact hours for your programme will depend upon your module combination; an average for a typical set of modules on this programme is – 80 hours. In addition to your scheduled contact hours, you will be expected to undertake guided independent study. Information about module contact hours and the amount of independent study which a student is normally expected to undertake for a module is indicated in the relevant module description.

Assessment

The programme will be assessed through a combination of written assignments, coursework, and a 15,000-word dissertation. Assessment patterns vary from module to module. Further information is contained in the individual module descriptions.

Progression
