Programme information and content

This programme aims to support you as you develop your understanding of literature through critical engagement and creative practice. You will study texts written in traditional genres (prose fiction, poetry, drama) as well as some written in less well-known and in newer forms. You will have the opportunity to consider different methods of critical analysis and you will develop your skills in close reading and interpretation. You will be supported as you develop your writing skills across different genres, including poetry, prose fiction and prose non-fiction. In each year of your degree, you will have the opportunity to explore the variedness of literature written in English from the Middle Ages to the present.

In Part 1 we consider the major literary genres (poetry, prose fiction and drama) and we survey practice and methods for Creative Writing. Part 2 allows you to investigate literature from different historical periods in more detail. In all our modules, we consider the theoretical issues that these texts raise. We consider how our interpretation of them can help us to understand our own cultural moment better. In Parts 2 and 3 we offer specialist Creative Writing modules that help you to develop skills and a portfolio of writing in different forms. Our Part 3 modules also enable you to contribute to debates that shape our subject by choosing from a wide range of research-based modules..

As a graduate in English Literature and Creative Writing from the University of Reading, you will have the skills you need to better understand the society in which we live and work and to express your ideas and opinions more clearly. You will have encountered some literary works that will stay in your memory and enrich your life for a long time after you leave us. As a graduate in English Literature and Creative Writing, you will enter the job market with highly developed research and communication skills; you will have the critical and cultural awareness necessary for working in areas such as the public sector and the media.

Part 1:	At Part 1 of our programme, you will learn about different approaches to the study of literature, through critical and research exercises and close study of selected texts from a number of different periods.
Part 2:	Part 2 will provide you with greater breadth of coverage, as you study texts from different historical periods and traditions.
Placement/Study abroad year:	Professional Placement Year and Study Abroad opportunities are available between Parts 2 and 3.
Part 3:	In Part 3 you will undertake more specialised and independent literary study, choosing your modules from a wide range of options. The dissertation module develops your skills in research, planning and writing.

Entry to optional modules will be at the discretion of the University and subject to availability and may be subject to pre-requisites, such as completion of another module. Although the University tries to ensure you are able to take the optional modules in which you have expressed interest this cannot be guaranteed.

Teaching and learning delivery:

You will begin your degree with some familiar concepts (in poetry, prose fiction and drama). In your literature modules, we will consider ways of reading and interpretation of texts that may be new to you. In your Creative Writing module, we will work on the different skills used in writing different genres. Your learning experience will involve a mix of lectures, asynchronous recorded content, and small-group seminar discussion.

In Part 2 you will choose modules designed to study literary texts in context, either in terms of history, place or culture. You will also be able to work in more detail on the writing that you enjoy most, fiction or non-fiction, poetry or prose. There is a greater emphasis on small-group discussion at Part 2, but material to help you familiarise yourself with the subject knowledge for each module will be provided in live lectures and in asynchronous recorded content.

In Part 3 you will choose the modules that best reflect your interests as a critic and a writer. You will be responsible for researching the texts yourself, and your learning will mostly consist of small-group discussion. You will have the option to do a larger piece of self-directed research in the dissertation module.

Across your three years of study, you will be assessed by traditional coursework essays and you will be asked to produce portfolios of creative work, but you may also be asked to do assessed presentations, develop learning journals, work, and undertake research projects. Detailed guidance will be given for assessment methods and you will be given module-specific marking criteria for each module.

Elements of your programme will be delivered via digital technology.

The scheduled teaching and learning activity hours and amount of technology enhanced learning activity for your programme will depend upon your module combination. In addition, you will undertake some self-scheduled teaching and learning activities, designed by and/or involving staff, which give some flexibility for you to choose when to complete them. You will also be expected to undertake guided independent study. Information about module study hours including contact hours and the amount of independent study which a student is normally expected to undertake for a module is indicated in the relevant module description.
