Programme information and content
The aim of the LLB is to provide legal education not only in the core areas of English law required to be awarded a qualifying law degree (QLD) but also in a variety of specialisms that enrich the student's experience and understanding of how law is used to solve disputes or achieve change. The overarching educational aim of this course is to not only impart legal knowledge but: to situate the law within wider global, national policy and practice contexts; to equip students with skills necessary for research, critical analysis, and application of law in a range of issues; and to provide opportunities for students to start developing the skills crucial to legal practice.
Part 1:	In Part 1, you will be supported in developing legal skills, and will be introduced to the teaching methods and expectations applicable to higher legal education. You will study four key areas of English law: contract, tort, criminal and public law, and practise applying the law to hypothetical scenarios to provide targeted advice to fictitious clients, as well as developing your ability to analyse the law from a critical perspective.
Part 2:	In Part 2, you will study the compulsory subjects in the qualifying law degree. You will also be able to choose two optional modules, one of which can be a module from another School. You will continue to develop your legal skills and ability to work with primary legal resources, to research the law and justify your conclusions.
Part 3:	In the final year, students must choose one from a range of independent research based modules to demonstrate mastery of legal writing, legal research and the construction of a legal argument. In addition, the School offers a wide range of option modules that give you a greater opportunity to focus your study on the areas of the law that interest you most.
